

Fighting To Live

April 1-2, 2015
In the Mississippi Delta
& at the University of
Mississippi School of Law

Symposium on Race & Sustainability

The reality and specter of race continue to plague America. The American South, however, faces particular challenges to sustainable living that have proved daunting. Basic access to food, education, health, and housing still elude many in the Southern region. As a result, activists, scholars, and health providers in the region have been struggling to innovate and create opportunities that could help enable sustainable life for the many disadvantaged groups in Mississippi.

The symposium participants will examine the data collected on sustainability efforts in MS and other parts of the country to determine loci and means of future actions and efforts.

For more information visit: <http://law.olemiss.edu/sustainability-mississippi-symposium/>

To register: <http://law.olemiss.edu/sustainability-mississippi-symposium/registration/>

Contact: Professor Michèle Alexandre malexand@olemiss.edu or 662.915.6858

Jennifer Kirby-McLemore jmkirby@go.olemiss.edu

Center for Population Studies
University of Mississippi

Photo Credit

Right: Lou Jacobs, Last Harvest, Mayfield Barn

Left: Jack Catlette, Shack Up Inn, Clarksdale, MS, 2011